1. Wrigley's chewing gum was actually developed as a premium to be given away with other products rather
2. than as a primary product for sale. As a teenager, William Wrigley Jr. was working for his father in Chicago selling
3. soap that had been manufactured in his father's factory. The soap was not very popular with merchants because
4. it was priced at five cents, and this selling price did not leave a good profit margin for the merchants. Wrigley
5. convinced his father to raise the price to ten cents and to give away cheap umbrellas as a premium for the
